Grand 4th of July Celebration at Cincinnati.

The C. H. & D. Railway are making arrangements to carry a large number of people into Cincinnati on the 3d, 4th and 5th of July, on account of the 4th of July celebrations. The "Queen City" will be alive with attractions on these days.

At the Lagoon, which is one of the most popular and attractive summer resorts in the West, they will have a Spanish gun boat blown up by an American torpedo boat. This is a sight worth going miles to see, and will occur on the 4th, and be repeated on the 5th of July. In addition to this there will be two and one-half miles of fireworks and lake attractions. There will be balloon races, horse races on the water. The Casino, with its cool verandas and its table service, will be fully equipped to serve a splendid menu, for which it is acquiring quite a reputation. There will be extra steam launches and electric launches on the lake. Several bands of music will be present, and Manager Noonan is preparing to take care of 75,000 people.

At the Zoo, on the 3d of July, there will be a grand concert in the morning and evening, with an elegant display of fireworks. On the 4th of July there will be a grand concert in the afternoon and evening. On the 5th there will be a grand concert with 75 musicians, and in the evening the Mackaye Comic Opera Company will begin their performance. At Chester Park there will be balloon races, morning and evening of July 4th and 5th, 11 a. m. and 5 p. m. Grand display of fireworks in the evening of July 5th. On July 4th and 5th, Gagerina, the wonderful swordswoman will fight a sword combat with Sergeant Swift, champion swordsman of the British Army on horseback. There will be bicycle races, the largest ever held at the track.

Coney Island, a delightful ride up the river of an hour and a half, will have hourly balloon ascensions on July 5th; also swimming contest and vanderbilt entertainments at 4:30 p. m. and 8 p. m. free. Dancing and fire concerts and elegant display of fireworks. There will also be a vanderbilt entertainment July 3d and 4th. Six boats will be put in service between Cincinnati and Coney Island for the 4th of July celebration.

At League Park one of the drawing cards will be a base ball game between the Baltimore and Cincinnati who will play on July 4th and 5th.

4th July, via Clover Leaf.

Excursion to Nashville, via C. H. & D. Ry.

For the Tennessee Exposition, which opens at Nashville May 1st and continues until October 31st, agents of the C. H. & D. Ry. will sell excursion tickets. Persons desiring to go to Nashville, will be furnished full information regarding time of trains, etc., on application to agents of the C. H. & D. Ry. Oct 197.

—There is a great deal of talk going around to the press about the Presidential train to be presented to President McKinley. The latest design is two second class cars, which when fastened together make one extra large car. This idea is the same as the C. H. & D. Ry. company's "Michigan Flyer," on which the vestibules extend the full width of the car, and when the car is coupled together make one continuous train. Persons along the C. H. & D. Ry. who have not yet seen the "Michigan Flyer," will do well to inspect this train, as it is one of the handiest in the West.

Teachers Excursion to Toledo via C. H. & D. Ry.

On account of the Ohio State Teachers Association, agents of the C. H. & D. Ry., will sell tickets at Toledo and return at one fare for the round trip, on June 28th, and 29th, good to return to and including July 3rd.

THE AMBITION OF EVA.

Eva Norrington inserted her latch key into the keyhole of a Bedford Square boarding house, and entered. It was a dismal, windy, rainy November evening, and ever since lunch she had been paddling about London, climbing grimy stairs of newspaper offices, and talking to people who did not seem especially pleased to see her. Her skirts were wet, and a wisp of damp hair was tumbling over her eyes. On the hall table, disclosed by the flickering gasjet, were some letters.

"A year ago to-day!" said Eva to herself as she closed the door against the wind. "Has he written, or has he forgotten?"

He had not forgotten. Eva picked up the letter from the hall table, looked quickly round at the closed hall door, at the closed dining-room door, and at the baize door that led to the kitchen stairs—and kissed it. Then she went upstairs to her bed-sitting-room with the letter in her hand and joy in her heart.

"Hateful little room!" she murmured to herself, as she struck a match and lit the gas. "But it's the last time, thank God!"

The room was not really bad; a bed in the corner, a wash-stand, a wardrobe, here and there a picture on the walls, and a table by the window, rather rickety, on which lay a heap of manuscript—a half-finished story.

"I will burn that before I go to bed to-night," said Eva, as she caught sight of it.

Eva Norrington had been the pride of the provincial town which gave her birth. At the high school no girl could stand against her. Her form, her features, her now and then asked her favorite pupils to tea, even asked she might be a head mistress one day. To Eva this seemed absurd. But when, at the age of 20, she gained a guinea prize for a story in a weekly paper she began to think that at least she might be a great novelist. At any rate she felt sure that somewhere ahead of her stretched a career; and as her 21st birthday approached she announced to her startled parents her intention of going to London in search of it. Thereupon ensued a series of domestic scenes such as have been common of late in the homes of England, wherein the parents play the part of the apprehensive hen, the daughter that of the adventurous duckling. The duckling invariably gains its point; and so it was with Eva Norrington. Having refuted argument and resisted persuasion for a certain number of weeks, Eva obtained a grudging consent to her departure. The townspeople knew not whether to admire or disapprove. But they had read in novels of young ladies who took their lives and latchkeys into their own hands, became famous, and married respectably after all. So during the weeks of preparation for her campaign Eva became something of a figure in local society, and more than one dinner party was given in her honor, as well as plentiful advice as to the necessary precautions against London guile, and many recipes for guarding against the colds induced by the fogs that infect the metropolis.

Eva was almost happy; for she had the hopefulness of youth and beauty, and all the exhilaration of taking her life into her hands and fashioning it as she would, with none to raise objections to the process. She would have been quite happy but for Allan Craig. For Allan Craig, whenever he heard that Eva was bent on going to London to make a name for herself, promptly offered her his own for a substitute. It was a good enough name, and at the foot of a check it was generally respected, as Allan Craig had lately stepped into his father's business as estate agent and was prospering. Eva was disturbed, but she turned not aside from her project. Eva had mapped out her life and Allan Craig was not included in the scheme.

As she sat fingering her letter in her bedroom, she went over the parting scene in her mind. The details of it would only increase the delight of the letter. For Eva had learned during the last year that happiness is so rare that it deserved to be rolled on the tongue and not swallowed in haste. It was at a dance on the night before her departure—her last dance, so she thought, before she started life in earnest. They were sitting out a dance together, for Eva was not disposed to think unkindly of Allan, though she might resent his intrusion into her scheme of life. She remembered how there had been silence between them for some moments, how Allan had leaned his elbows on his knees and dug the heel of his dancing shoe into the carpet.

"And so you are quite determined to leave us?" said Allan.

"Of course," replied Eva. "My boxes are all packed."

"Full of manuscript novels and other things?"

"One novel and several stories."

"I cannot understand why you want to go when—"

"I want to—well—to live a larger life."

"You mean you want to live in a bigger place?"

"Well, not exactly. I don't think you quite understand."

"I quite understand that there is not enough scope for you here, and that I am a selfish brute for trying to keep you from your ambition. Look here, Eva, can you honestly say that you don't love me a little bit?"

"I shall be sorry to leave you—very sorry."

"Then why—"

"Can't you see, Allan? I know I have it in me to do good work, and I must be where good work is wanted. Here I am hampered; in London—"

"You may fail," said Allan, with a note of hope in his voice. Then Eva spoke:

"I shall succeed—I know I shall."

"Will you write to me?"

Eva hesitated. She was half inclined to give in to that extent. Allan had mistaken her hesitation.

"No," he said. "There shall be no selfishness in my love for you. I will wait a year from to-night, and then, if London is no go, you know there will always be me. You can't expect me to pray for your success, can you?"

Eva, placed on her mettle, looked him in the face.

"I am bound to succeed," she said, and turned to go. The waltz had ceased in the room below, and a rustle of skirts and a ripple of tongues had taken its place.

"Eva—once—the last time, perhaps."

She turned again, laughing.

"Quick!" she said; "some one will come."

A woman may forget many things, but no woman ever forgets the first time a lover's arm was around her waist and a lover's lips upon her own. And as Eva sat in the corner of a third-class carriage in the London train next morning, looking forward to the career before her, the remembrance of the support of Allan's arm persisted in obtruding itself. Having got what she wanted she had already begun to doubt if she wanted what she had got. For a career, after all, is a rather lonesome sort of a thing.

Such small success as may come to the inexperienced girl upon her first incursion into literature came to Eva. She lived sparingly, worked hard, and never made the mistake of refusing invitations on the ground of work. She staid up a little later or got up a little earlier instead. A weekly column on "Health and Beauty" placed at her disposal by the youthful editor of a new woman's paper, who had met her at the Writers' club and thought her pretty, paid her weekly bill at the boarding house. Her stories found frequent acceptance and occasional welcome in the minor periodicals, and a happy meeting with an editor at a dinner party paved the way to her appearance in a widely-read magazine. By the end of the year Eva Norrington had got so far towards the realization of her ambition that when people heard her name mentioned they wrinkled their brows and tried to remember where they had heard it before. At home, of course, her fame was great. The papers in which she wrote circulated freely in the town, her stories were discussed at afternoon teas, and townfolk were glad to think that they participated to some extent in the literary work of the century.

All this time Eva was horribly lonely. She knew plenty of people and liked them; they were kind to her, some of them because they liked her for herself, others because they saw that she was marked for ultimate success. Having advanced a certain distance along the road she had longed to travel, she could judge better whether it would lead her. It would lead her to a place in the newspaper paragraphs, to a place on the book stalls, to a place in the photographers' windows, and to a place at Baywater or South Kensington. This, then, must be the end of the struggle and the turmoil of the fight. And how she hated the fight! A fight wherein victory would bring her no nearer to the actualities of life; for she had come to learn in the year's struggle that our social system by no means places women on an equality with men, and that whereas men can buy the coveted fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil by the pottle, women must buy the tree outright, and pay cash. It was a terrible affair. And the most unfair thing about the whole business was that, while success was almost within her grasp, success was not what she wanted. There is no fun in living your own life when that is precisely the life you do not want to lead.

It was not as though Allan Craig had never kissed Eva Norrington.

She opened the letter—cutting the envelope with her nail scissors. For some distinction must be made between your first love letter and your bootmaker's bill. She felt like one who has held his breath to feel what suffocation is like. The letter was long. Eva read quickly at first, then slowly, knitting her brows as she turned the pages, and came at last to the signature: "Ever your friend, Allan Craig."

The letter lay for some minutes in Eva's lap, while she looked vaguely round her room.

"He is afraid of spoiling my career—my success has put an insuperable barrier between us," she murmured. The phrases of the letter had burned themselves into her brain. "O, Allan! I wish I could tell you—or do you want to hear?"

Five years passed before she saw Allan Craig again, and then the meeting was unexpected—at the exit of the theater where Eva had gone to see the hundredth performance of her play. Allan was obviously proud of knowing her, and introduced his wife, to whom she gave graceful recognition. It was raining and Allan offered to see Eva to a cab. They stood for a moment on the steps to the entrance.

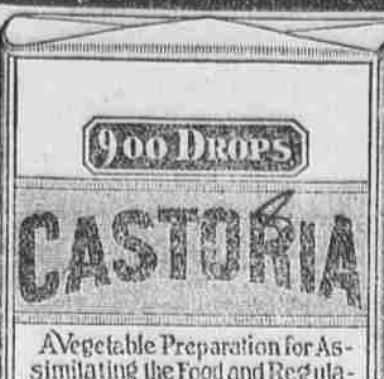

"Yes," said Allan, in answer to Eva's polite question, "all is going well. We have a little daughter—Eva—my wife's name, curiously enough."

He stood by theansom as she entered, guarding her dress from the wheel. As she turned to give the address, he said:

"I ought to congratulate you on your success. It is very sweet to me. You know—you owe it all to me. Are you grateful?"

"Yes; I owe it to you," she said, leaning forward as the apron closed upon her, and the attendant constable grew impatient. "Attend and see me—Tuesdays."

"I can't think why I should be so silly," said Eva to herself, as she stuffed her handkerchief back into her pocket and felt for her latch-key, when the cab drew up before the hall door of her flat in Kensington.—Black and White.

Niagara Falls Annual Excursion.

Via the popular route C. H. & D. Thursday July 8th. The C. H. & D. being the originators of the cheap excursions to Niagara Falls, have again succeeded in getting practically the same former cheap rates. There are many new features at the falls and one in particular that none of our former patrons have been privileged to see—a seven mile railroad ride on the American side, on a level with the river from the Falls to Lewiston, not one of the grandest, but it can be truthfully said the grandest railroad ride in the world, worth more than the price of a ticket and expense at the Falls for this ride alone. Remember the date, July 8th and consult your agent and begin at once to form your parties that ample coaches and sleeping cars can be provided for. Having had years of experience in conducting these excursions I will be pleased to call on parties who desire to form societies and excursion parties for this trip and make every arrangement necessary to make the trip pleasant. I will personally accompany the excursion. J. C. Winans, Div. Pass. Agt., Toledo, O.
